JOB MARKET PAPER

Improving the Perception of the Police by the Youth (link)

The relationship between the police and part of the population in France is tense. I use a lab-in-the-field experiment in two high-schools in France to investigate the effect of a brief and controlled discussion between police officers and students on trust. I find a positive effect of contact on trust at the individual level - corresponding to an increase of approximately 0.4 standard deviation, however the effect does not translate to the police in general. A theoretical model of belief formation can shed light on why a single contact could not be sufficient due to prior - negative - interactions.
